AN INTERVIEW WITH THE HON. J. C. F.
JOHNSON, M.L.A.

[illegible]

TIME IS MONEY.

Time and money will be saved by keeping Dr. Bell's Bitters in the house. It is an invaluable remedy for all disorders of the kidneys, liver, and bowels, and for all disorders arising from obstructions of these organs. It has cured many obstinate cases after hundreds of pounds had been paid to physicians without obtaining relief. It cures constipation, piles, biliousness, and all kindred disorders. Keep it by you.—[ADVT.]

any means account for the enormous increase in the expenditure for the Civil purposes of the Government. Now, some gentlemen asked what the present Government had done. Well, this Government had done what they said they would do. (Cries of "Hear, hear," and "No, no.") They had restored the tariff of this country to its free-trade character of a few years ago. (Disent and applause.) They had restored the tariff of this country to a freer character than it ever possessed before. (Cries of "Yes, yes.") He said, "Yes." Further, in order to save the trouble and expense of writing and sending stones to England for my examination and opinion, I would advise those who find themselves possessors of any of these garnets, to kindly address themselves to the University of Sydney, where I have by this mail sent to the care of Professor Liveridge two of these stones cut from one solid crystal, with a model of the rough stone before it was divided.

A letter from the secretary of the Water Board, re the erection of hydrants, evoked as comment, the opinion being expressed that the committee did not know what he was talking about. The letter was left in the hands of Alderman Lander to be read before the board. A letter was received from the Works Department, intimating that plans for the sewer in Elizabeth-street are being prepared, and that tenders will be invited for its construction in anticipation of legislative authority being obtained to take over the sum of £50,000, to pay for the main as well as all subsidiary sewers, for which purpose the necessary steps are now being taken.

The approaching departure of the episcopal heads of our two hierarchical churches as a visit to Europe is one of those events that remind us of our increasing proximity to the older centres of civilisation. The gulf between Australia and Europe is narrowing thing is occurring to show that the anti-imperialists are becoming measurably nearer together. All successful colonists go home, and every P. and O. Orient boat brings us shoals of visitors. This, therefore, not as much remarkable about this simultaneous visit of the PRIMATE and the CARDINAL as there would have been about the departure of two ecclesiastical dignitaries some years ago; though it is still, perhaps, not a little remarkable that one of the wealthiest of the churches pleads the poverty of its representative as a reason for a public movement to raise funds to defray the expenses of his trip. Yet the coincidence of these visits hints that of the PRIMATE to attend the session of the Pan-Anglican Synod, and that of Cardinal MORAN to report on the concerns of his diocese to the Papal See—would be a sufficiently remarkable fact at any time.

It is not so very many years ago since Australia formed part of the See of Calcutta in the Church of England, and part of the Diocese of Mauritius in the Church of Rome. For an ecclesiastic, to set out to labour in Australia was to go forth to work among the heathen and the outer barbarians, and for quite a long time an Australian bishopric was looked upon—if it is not in some circles still—as a foreign mission. If all this is not yet changed, it is at least very rapidly changing.

The colonies are becoming accustomed to the advent of men of scholarly culture and broad views, whose use of a field of labour worthy of the best talents and attainments they possess. In Dr. RUSSELL we have had frequently to acknowledge the presence amongst us of one of broad vision and noble ideals of citizenship, while the concentrated zeal of the CARDINAL has always been strongly evidenced in his own work. There has been a wide difference in the directions the personal influence of these two dignitaries has taken. The PRIMATE has so far forgotten the old exclusiveness of his order as to enter in a catholic spirit into many extra-denominational movements in which he has found his own inspirations actively clergyman of other denomination co-operating with him. Dr. MORAN has not shown himself so ready to accept such assistance, or to assist others; and he has not yet appeared on the public platform as Cardinal MANNING so frequently has done at home. How far this policy may tend to isolate the body he represents from the rest of the community might fairly be a subject of speculation, as well as how far it may be due to the personal idiosyncrasies of that prelate, apart from the well-known policy of his Church on such matters. Not many years ago the peculiar talents of either of these two men would have been thrown away among such communities as the Australian colonies then consisted of; but with the advance of our people and the development of the social order the field of ecclesiastical work has expanded also, until it has become a field in which any husbandman may work. Both the prelates who are now going home have made similar visits before. When Dr. Moran returned to the colony on the last occasion he came back with the added dignity of the Roman purple on his shoulders, as the first Australian Cardinal. We are told to expect that Dr. Barry will similarly return from his present trip as the first Anglican Archbishop of Australia. These facts further mark the growing importance of Australian affairs in the direction of church matters, which, in this connection at least, draw a good deal of their colour from the opinions of the world.

These repeated visits home of ecclesiastical dignitaries of the connection between the home churches and those of the colonies. We have brought our religious faiths with us, and these have not yet had time to adapt themselves to the new conditions of a new country. Novel social conditions produce a new social order, and the circumstances of a young people sometimes give rise to something new in political theories; and we have even seen that the population of new countries have tried new experiments in ecclesiastical discipline, and evolved new church organisations under their changed conditions. Nothing of the kind seems to have occurred in Australia yet. The heads of our hierarchical Churches still go home for their instructions, and dutifully repair to the fountain-head of their authority to give an account of their stewardship, and to report on the condition of the organisations they lead to the recognised authorities that sent them forth. The connection is, therefore, still an active one, and whatever developments may shadow themselves as possible or probable in the future, have still to give their first definite pre-indications. In the meantime, this repeated contact of the leaders of ecclesiastical thought with the exponents of their respective schools at home brings us into touch with the growth of opinion, and gives us—or should give us—the advantage of what is being said and done in the highest circles of the schools to which they belong. And this is no small advantage. In one of those charming everyday books that WALTER BESANT has written, he says that the one thing in colonial life that is little comprehended is that "ideas change slowly out there." The things which change ideas, he goes on to say, are the new discoveries, the new theories, the new men, which are continually turning up at home. They are talked about in magazines, so that people abroad may read them, but that is not the same thing—the cold page does not give the "touch" of the time. We must send our social leaders home to observe for us and garner the sheaves.

This is one of the advantages, too, of having single individuals as the permanent heads of ecclesiastical organisations. The episcopal leader is the mouthpiece of his Church, and its members, unconsciously or not, take much of their tone and colour from him. When such a man is in touch with the progress of enlightenment, the body he leads cannot be far behind; though against this is to be placed the disadvantage that a non-progressive man in such a position would retard the advance of the whole mass of his followers. This feature of a personal head has its valuable disciplinary uses in more ways than one, however; in local effort, in ordinary church work, and in those social and philanthropic movements in which it is the province of the Churches to interest themselves. The body that is directed by one guiding mind must gain a great deal in concentrated effort, where other bodies are so systematised, must expect a waste of force. In this respect the Anglican and Roman Catholic communities seem to have for active purposes a great advantage over those Churches that elect their leader annually; though on the other hand, it may be claimed that the latter possess a freedom of individual action that the former must be content to exchange for their disciplinary advantages in the field of active labour.

Is England a Christian nation? Startling as the inquiry may be, and calculated as it is to disturb the religious quietude of the majority of people, it has lately been made in England where circumstances occurred which seemed to indicate the decay of Christianity. The occasion was the victory achieved by Mr. BRADLAUGH in carrying through his Oaths Bill by a majority of 100 out of 250. It was an event of no common estimation when it is remembered that a few years ago Mr. BRADLAUGH literally fought his way into the House of Commons. The conservative spirit of Parliament was opposed to what was considered a dangerous innovation, and a breach of that constitutional recognition of Christianity which has long existed. The complete revolution of sentiment in regard to the matter is but another indication of how human judgment may undergo changes without apparent reason, and against all seeming consistency. Viewed properly, it is but an evidence of the fact that humanity is not always aware, after all, how well-founded it is in its belief in a principle. It further shows, principle aside, that tradition must not be lightly reckoned with in all things that go by the name of reform in these days of development and progress. So swift is "the process of the sun" and the broadening of the influence of new intellectual forces, that men are scarcely aware that new principles exist till they are called upon to bury the old ones. The shock sometimes is severe. It was so in the case to which we refer. But the highest tribunal in the land has set its seal upon the tomb of the old custom, and has declared for what it once rudely rejected.

But the thing being done, the English press is asking whether, having thus "abandoned," one by one, all the old testimonies to the religiousness of the State, England is any longer a Christian nation. Up to the passing of this bill, though most of the old religious tests set by the State had been abandoned, body corporate of the people not only recognised the existence of a Supreme Being, but were one with the Church by act of formal acknowledgment, and so one with Christianity. There is left but the individual responsibility and recognition, and this will still be in the eyes of very many but a sad condition of affairs. The strict churchman will see in it the swift oblivion of Christian belief in the land, and the weakening of the foundations of the State. The narrow and cynical sceptic will find in it the triumph of that specious phrase, "intellectual freedom," and very many, whose sympathies are all with the Christian faith, though perhaps not with the Christian creed and dogma, will regard the renunciation of the principle of oath-taking as characteristic of the gradual attenuation of belief in the Great Master whom the nation, as such, has acknowledged in its institutions and has made the most sacred pledge for truth and justice. It might seem that all the pessimism which would spring from a retrospective view of the abolition of Christian tests is largely warranted; but may not, after all, the estimate be one which has regard to surface expressions, and not to underlying conceptions? For does it appear to the intelligent spectator of the condition of mankind, limiting it even to the English-speaking world, or to England itself, that the power of Christianity has ceased to be, or has indeed been losing its evidences in affecting the life of society, and shaping the destinies of human lives? Behind the destruction of old religious habits and an untoward conformity there must be a spirit acting which is of Christianity, because the great principle of moral obligation, which is the substance of the visible expression of the acknowledgement of a Creator, cannot be said to be in decay.

To satisfy himself regarding the matter the churchman would ask, "Is the Church increasing?" "If so, then Christianity is not losing its hold upon the world." But this is not the highest test. The churchman believes that attendance upon public worship indicates correctly the general estimation of Christianity; but it is possible that a large number of people do not regard church-going as necessary to the continuity of their belief, or to the existence of their religious sentiments. Whether right or wrong, this feeling lives, and yet because it does, it cannot be said that it is a sign of the eclipse of Christianity. There is something else on which reckoning must be made before the final verdict is passed. "Is orthodoxy increasing?" others would ask, and because the reply would be an unqualified negation, the conclusion would be that the doom of our old simplicity of belief was sealed. Much has been let go that once was considered essential. Future punishment, accomplished through material horrors, has gone with the literal interpretation of the Mosaic account of creation, and the doctrine of the Trinity has not the tenure that it had fifty years ago. Still this is no decisive proof that the days of England's national existence as a Christian nation are numbered. If we are told to look and see what we have let go in regard to Sabbath observance, by the opening of picture galleries, museums, &c., on the Day of Rest, and many other things which a puritanical rigidity insisted upon, the only reply that can be given is, that the world has come to view Christian obligations from a different attitude, and has decided that the religious regulations of one age will not always adapt themselves to the wants of another. Having given up visible tests and certain religious habits and mental assents, it may appear that there has been national decay. But the real test and the final are to be found in the question, "Is the spirit of Christianity increasing?"

We think it is. It cannot be said that the moral condition of mankind is worse than it was fifty or a hundred, or a thousand years ago. The backbone of all belief is a recognition of the existence and spiritual supremacy of God and the full expression of them in the life of the CHRIST. From His life we come to His teachings, and that principle of living which involves not only the rule of conduct but the spirit of obedience to a high sense of moral responsibility. Can it be said that this moral obligation does not find wide expression in these days? England and the world are better to-day than they have ever been, if we regard the moral condition of society as any thing to reckon by, and the breadth of Christian sentiment is greater. Though men may even deny Christianity or sever from its teachings, they express its influence more or less in their lives. The vibration of the Christian spirit of one generation is felt in the next; and when men are inclined to doubt there are evidences about them of a religious vitality which is demonstrated in action rather than in profession. As for the Oaths Bill and the permission given by it to affirm rather than to swear, it cannot alter much the final estimation of Christian sentiment. The oath had its value. To some who believed it had a special sacredness, and they would hesitate to swear to what they would affirm without pause, but to the unbeliever the oath could be nothing else but a farce. To Judges still is left the power to administer the oath in some cases if they think fit, and it may still play its part in the administration of justice, but general compulsion in the matter is a thing of the past. The Oaths Bill is an outcome of the sentiment of the time, and because it is so, to those who have still enough optimism to hope, it will not necessarily make England less the Christian nation or "tend to the deterioration of the national character."

It is to be regretted that Cardinal MORAN, being about to leave the colony for a while, has seen fit to utter words which will be remembered after he has gone, and remembered unpleasantly. If the most charitable construction be put upon them, it would be difficult to regard them as a farwell benediction. In his address to the priests at Manly on Wednesday, the CARDINAL rejoiced over the fact that the Roman Catholics of this colony enjoy the blessings of religious freedom. He also acknowledged with gratification that not a few of those who are separated from them in religious communion show earnest sympathy and prove themselves generous and devoted friends. But are these feelings reciprocated? "It will be a duty," says the CARDINAL, "to pray that every blessing may be their recompense, and it shall be our aim to correspond to such kindness by promoting peace and concord." &c. But are peace and concord to be promoted by such a declaration as this, which followed almost immediately? "It is to be regretted that outside the Catholic communion the prevailing spirit of the age throughout Australia is indifference to all religion." Is the CARDINAL sure of that? In the absence of something like absolute certainty men of prominence who propose to utter in public such sweeping statements should be mindful of the risk they run of violating the ninth commandment. It is to be observed that the assertion comprises within it the not always desirable element of comparison. If the Roman Catholics have received sympathy, friendship, and kindness from people outside their communion, is it seemly to draw invidious comparisons between those who are without and those who are within? It would hardly be so if the comparisons were accurate; but when the accuracy is obviously open to doubt, the evil is aggravated. How are we to test the truth of this charge of "indifference to all religion" outside the Roman Catholic Church? Most men who have religious belief will probably hold that one day this question of indifference or interest will be tried with a greater insight into character than any ecclesiastical dignitary can now bring to bear upon it. Probably the CARDINAL himself believes that each man to his own master will stand or fall. For the present we can only deal with rudimentary tests. It is not our purpose to revert to those statistics of denominational crime (if the term may be used) about which our correspondents were wrangling some months ago. We turn instead to what may be described as conventional evidence of interest in religion. From the tables in the last Statistical Register we gather the fact that in 1886, whilst the Roman Catholics represented 27.63 per cent. of the population of the colony, the members of that Church usually attending on Sunday at places of public worship represented 30.01 per cent. of the total number of attendants of all denominations, Sunday school children being excluded from the calculation in both cases. Thus the Roman Catholic proportion of attendance at Sunday service was 2.38 per cent. in excess of the proportion to population. On the other hand the number of children belonging to the Roman Catholic Church attending at Sunday schools was 22.33 per cent. of the whole attendance, or 5.30 below the proportion which the Roman Catholics bear to the population of the colony. We do not say that these figures are sufficient to prove everything; but they are sufficient to prove that this charge of "indifference to all religion" outside the Roman Catholic Church should not have been made. And if they do not prove everything, they do not comprehend everything; for certainly we cannot recognise "indifference to all religion" in the active work carried on and the large contributions collected in the cause of religion amongst the members of the Protestant denominations—contributions, it may be added, which are not generally the result of undue pressure.

The PREMIER on Friday night at Bathurst added but little to the information of the country. We have been told once again how long he has held office. The information appears to have fallen on the ears of some of his audience, who did not behave in the best of taste, but it cannot be said that the PREMIER met the hostile reception of the few with that dignity which might be looked for in one who has so long filled the important offices to which he referred. A review of the measures which he had been instrumental in passing into law seemed no more to the taste of his audience. Having glanced at these, he went on to refer more particularly to the measures of the past decade. The question of finance was introduced to show the economy with which the first Government of the decade, lasting longer than any other, had administered the public affairs, and the great extravagance that had characterised the Administration which succeeded it. This might have been interesting if it had been news, but the repetition of the story, which has been so often told with slight variations, became wearisome. The PREMIER was brought up with the question as to what the present Government had done. In restoring free trade, passing an Act for the management of the railways, and carrying through a measure to make better provision for the construction of public works, he claimed that the Government had done more in the fifteen months in which they held office than had been done during the preceding four years. The PREMIER's defence of the principles of free trade was not well received by some of his audience, though it seems difficult to understand how, at least, his views on this question should not find favour in a constituency which can gain nothing by protection, but which may suffer as the farming constituencies of Victoria have suffered. The visit of the PREMIER to Bathurst has so far not added much to the political knowledge of the country.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

We understand that the next weekly meeting of the Executive Council will be held on Wednesday next instead of Tuesday. Sir Alfred Stephen, Lieutenant-Governor will preside. Amongst other items of business to be dealt with, it is not improbable that several cases, where prisoners have been sentenced to death, will be dealt with.

The Attorney-General and the Minister for Justice are engaged in making arrangements for providing for the more frequent holding of Quarter Sessions throughout the various districts of the colony. This step has been found necessary, to prevent hardship in cases where a prisoner might be compelled to wait for some time after committing, before his case could be tried. While the arrangements referred to are being made, the Attorney-General is making every effort to prevent hardship in cases of prisoners waiting for trial. A case in point occurred only a short time ago at Tuen, when a prisoner was charged with wounding with intent to murder. It was necessary that this case should be dealt with by the Supreme Court. The prisoner was therefore committed to take his trial at the Bathurst Circuit Court, to be held in October next. The case having been brought under the notice of the Attorney-General, and Mr. Simpson, having carefully examined the depositions, arrived at the opinion that the ends of justice would be sufficiently served by charging the prisoner with intent to injure by bodily harm, which charge brought the case under the jurisdiction of the Quarter Sessions, to be held at Goulburn on June 6. This step shortens the period during which the accused must wait before trial, and causes no hardship to witnesses, inasmuch as Mr. Simpson found (so far as he had been able to ascertain) that the distances to travel in both cases were about equal.

It is understood between the engineering firms which recently contracted for the construction of locomotives in New South Wales, that no further effort will be made, at all events for the time being, to renew the original tenders which were submitted to the Government. The tenders expressed themselves as being content to allow the opportunity for undertaking the work to pass by without anxiety; more particularly as they, in the first instance, sent in their tenders based upon a scale which, according to their calculations, at the best, could only have returned to them a fractional profit upon their outlay. On Monday morning next a meeting will be held at the Minister for Works, the Hon. John Sutherland, at the Eveleigh railway work-shops, and the subject of the acceptance of colonial tenders will then be further discussed.

Mr. J. C. F. JOHNSON, Minister for Education for the Northern Territory, and also Minister in Charge of the Northern Territory, accompanied by his private secretary (Mr. Evans), arrived in Sydney yesterday morning by the steamer Catterham, from Brisbane. In response to inquiries concerning his trip by a representative of the Herald, Mr. Johnson said that he started from Adelaide on the 10th January, and after remaining in Sydney for a fortnight in connection with the recent Postal Conference, proceeded to Brisbane. Here he interviewed Mr. Griffiths in relation to the Chinese question. On the question generally Mr. Johnson expressed himself decidedly against the introduction of the Chinese, and thought that there were already enough Chinese in the Northern Territory to carry on any labour enterprise which might be initiated. With regard to mining, Mr. Johnson thought there was great merit in the Northern Territory, and that, in the case of silver, tin, and other minerals, but considers that the country is very little developed, especially in the case of gold. During his visit, Mr. Griffiths went into the question of coast lighting, and fixed upon Point Emery and Cape Don as suitable for the erection of lights. Mr. Johnson had a long conference with the Hon. Mr. Mitchell, and also with the Hon. Mr. Deane on the question. The present day of departure are considered very unsatisfactory for New South Wales and Victoria, and it is hoped that some more advantageous arrangement may be arrived at.

His Honour Mr. Justice OWEN sat in Equity yesterday afternoon, and decided a number of matters, with a number of formal applications, as well as probate and administration. In the suit Holt v. Giblin, an adjournment for a fortnight was granted. An application was submitted by the administrator of the intestate estate of the late Sir James Martin that the Court should administer the estate. The matter was referred to the Master of the Rolls, who has since then seemed a hostile attitude, it was feared that unless the estate was taken in hand by the Court much loss might accrue owing to litigation. The order prayed for was granted. Mr. Justice Foster having returned from Circuit took Chamber business yesterday morning, but no matters of great interest were decided. Amongst other cases postponed was that of Mitchell v. Harvey, in which the appellant (plaintiff) appeals against the decision of the Justices of Narrandera. The case is one under the Enclosed Lands Protection Act, and the question for decision is, whether land which is closed on three sides by fencing, and on the fourth by the Narrandera River, is enclosed land within the meaning of the Act.

We regret to announce the death of Mr. John Thomas Dillon, Crown Prosecutor, which occurred at his residence, Brooklynn-street, Burwood, on the 20th instant. The funeral, which was attended by a large number of relatives and friends, took place yesterday afternoon at Brookwood. As a mark of their esteem and regard for the deceased, a few of his friends, members of the Bar, have decided to publish a notice of his death in the Herald. Mr. Dillon was born in West Maitland, where his education was commenced. He was subsequently a student at Lyndhurst College, after which he matriculated at the Sydney University, where he took successively the degrees of B.A. and M.A. In March, 1869, he was called to the Bar of New South Wales, and for some years he was frequently called upon to act as Crown Prosecutor. In December, 1880, Mr. Dillon was elected to the Legislative Assembly as representative of the Hunter, which position he held until the dissolution in February, 1872. In 1877 he became representative of Testinfield, but he resigned that position at the beginning of 1882, in order to take the office of Stipendiary Magistrate in Sydney. The duties of this important position proved too much for his health, and he was compelled to resign, and henceforth only practised at the Bar, either as an ordinary advocate or prosecutor for the Crown.

We understand that the Board of Health intend instituting criminal proceedings against Mr. Sydney Collins Watkins, of Manly, medical practitioner, for having omitted to report a case of scurvy amongst the sufferer being Jane Lakenham, by reason of which omission and default he has rendered himself liable to a penalty of not less than £10 nor more than £50. The secretary to the Board of Health has, we learn, caused a summons to be issued. The case, which is one of public importance, will be heard before the magistrates on the 10th May.

The following gentlemen have been successful in the examination held by the Stock Board of Examiners, which commenced at the Department of Mines on Monday last and concluded yesterday, viz.:—J. W. Boulton, Sydney; J. L. Henderson, Goulburn; and A. H. Farrand, Forbes.

The members of the Victorian Vegetable Products Commission left for Melbourne by the express train this afternoon. Inquiries regarding the development of the dairy farming industry were made on Thursday at Kinnaird, where several butter factories, owned and conducted by farmers as co-operative enterprises, were inspected. It was ascertained that so much success had attended the introduction of the system that butter factories were being established on every hand. Further evidence as to the beneficial results attending the present system of dealing with the produce of the dairy was given to-day by the assistant manager of the Fresh Food and Ice Company, who said there would be no difficulty in securing good men to conduct butter factories in Victoria, if such institutions should be established there.

A trial of the new tubular bells, which have been placed in the Post Office tower by Mr. A. Toraguchi, contractor for the Post Office clock, was made yesterday. The bells were struck repeatedly in various ways, and the effect produced was carefully noted by observers stationed in different parts of the city. The night, being fine and clear, was especially favourable for the experiment, and the bells seemed to give forth a very satisfactory volume of sound, as their tones were audible at a long distance.

Mr. W. E. SMITH, manufacturing stationer, has recently introduced into the colony the most up-to-date machinery, and his factory at 227 and 229 George-street, is now one of the most complete in the colonies. Amongst other pieces of machinery may be mentioned a quad-emi Wharfedale Italian special colour machine, with patent feeders. It is remarkable both for its size and its adaptability—combining as it does all the most improved machinery for the purpose. The work it has to do. There are about one hundred hands employed at the factory, which embraces the several departments of a manufacturing stationer. On the first floor is a splendid assortment of all kinds of paper suitable for commercial stationery. A steam lift communicates with this and the other floors, so that the necessary supplies are readily conveyed to the respective departments. On the second floor are the lithographic and letterpress departments, with the composing and stereotyping rooms adjoining; and on the third floor will be found the binding, ruling, and varnishing departments, from which some excellent work is now being turned out for some of the larger establishments of the city. The whole of the machinery is worked by a gas engine. Numerous fine samples of the work done at the factory may be seen at Mr. Smith's retail department, at 28 and 30, Bridge-street.

At the District Court yesterday a case of an unusual kind was decided before Judge Murray. Mrs. Mary Ann Jones, a widow, residing at Bulli, sued the Bulli Coal-mining Company, limited, for £250. "For work and labour done and materials supplied in connection with the late colliery disaster at Bulli, in washing, shrouding, and preparing 81 bodies for burial at 5s. each." The defence was that the plaintiff had undertaken the work herself at her own request, and it was pointed out that she had been assisted by other men who had not made any claim upon the company for the services they had rendered on the same day. After hearing evidence the Judge gave a verdict for plaintiff for the amount claimed.

During the trip of the steamer Fairlight from Manly to Sydney last evening a cry of "Woman overboard" was raised by someone on board. Captain Nicholson immediately stopped his steamer, a boat was lowered, and put out and manned with great promptitude. The boat was pulled round and round the vicinity, but no trace of anything in the shape of a woman could be seen, nor in fact could anything be seen floating about.

After a search of about 20 minutes the boat returned to the Fairlight, and the journey to Sydney was resumed. By many on board the cry "Woman overboard" was considered a hoax. If such was the case the person who would so trifle with such a serious matter in such a way should be severely punished.

The Naval Artillery Volunteers will this afternoon accord the honour of a naval funeral to their late comrade, Mr. H. B. H. Ellis, of Richmond, Petersburg. The details are announced in our advertising columns.

In our report of the British and Foreign Bible Society yesterday the number of Bibles (1200) mentioned as sent out for circulation "in the colony," should have been "in the schools of the colony."

PARTICULARS of the annual meeting of the Sydney City Mission, to be held in the hall of the Y. M. C. A., on Tuesday evening next, will be found in our advertising columns. The objects of the mission are set forth, and a summary of work done is given.

ATTEMPTED MURDER OF A YOUNG WOMAN BY HER HUSBAND.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

MELBOURNE, FRIDAY. A profound sensation was created in Richmond at about 8 o'clock last night. There was an attempted murder of a young woman by her supposed husband, who has made his escape for the present. The pair were driving along Swan-street in a cab. On the vehicle turning into Clifton-street, two successive shots attracted the notice of passers-by, who observed a woman fall headlong from the cab into the roadway. She raised herself and staggered on to the footpath, where the bystanders supported her. It was found that she had received one charge in her face, which was marked with the explosion, and she was bleeding freely. She was too exhausted to tell her name or her address. A stranger saw her walk along the street and stand for a few minutes with her back to the fence, no one caring to approach in the absence of the police. As the crowd collected round the woman the cabman attempted to drive away, but a young man seized the reins and brought the vehicle to a standstill, the cabman severely rebuking him with his whip. The driver was secured, and the woman put into the cab and driven to the Alfred Hospital. The cabman was given in charge. On searching him a telegram was found addressed "Maud Markham, Mac's Hotel," saying "Mother met with accident, can be seen alive." On the back was written, "Mrs. Jones, 83, Clifton-street, Richmond," and following, in pencil, "I am afraid this is a hoax on the part of her husband in order to do her personal harm, and I cannot allow it to go unless I am sure that her mother is really ill, which I fervently hope she is not. W. G. Glover." At the hospital it was found that the woman's name agreed with that on the telegram. She was able to say that her husband shot her. She had two wounds, one a dangerous one in front of the throat. The telegram turns out to be a bogus one. She went in the cab, accompanied by Mr. Newport as protector. He went to her mother's house, and just then the woman's husband rushed to the cab, and fired the shots. The alert is known to the police.

WOMAN'S FRANCHISE MEETING IN MELBOURNE.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

MELBOURNE, FRIDAY. A public meeting was held in the Brighton Town Hall last evening, to consider the question of extending the franchise to women. The Mayor of Brighton, Mr. T. Bent, M.L.A., occupied the chair. About 120 persons were present, women predominating, and a large number of them by train from Melbourne. A resolution was moved by Rev. Dr. Bromby, and seconded at some length by Mrs. B. Smythe, a widow, who considered that, being taxed, she had an equal right with men to representation in Parliament. The resolution was—"That it is the opinion of this meeting the Legislature should pass without delay an Act legalising women's suffrage." A Mr. Ryan submitted an amendment which was in effect the negative of the motion, but found no second. The motion was carried by 57 to 24. A motion to forward the resolution to the Premier was negatived by 55 to 28.

The sun shone out brilliantly, but the being the eastern the sun's rays were robbed of a considerable amount of their summer heat, consequently the day was most enjoyable, and many people had gone out for such a day for outdoor exercise. As the day drew on the weather still continued apparently clear and tranquil. In the country the weather was as fine inland, cloudy in the north-east, and in the north-east showery.

NEGLECTED ITALIAN CHILDREN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

I observe in your edition of Friday, 27th instant, a letter from a letter upon the above subject, written by Haynes, M.L.A., in which he is good enough to give my name as one of the Italian artists who are in our countrymen's artistic talents. Now, I am always exceedingly willing to contribute all my artistic efforts to the development of our art, and as a first step in this direction in this particular instance I shall offer the suggestion: That the public generally should be encouraged these little waifs in their efforts to become successful beggars by giving them a few pennies, for it is the consequence of the begging by these children proving remunerative that induces them to neglect their talents and to leave their employ-ment; and that the school attendance officers are in their duty if they neglect to put the compulsory attendance act in force against these children and their guardians.

It is that Mr. Haynes, in his capacity as a legislator, should take such steps as may lead to the protection of these children; and that you, sir, will do so in the endeavor to attract the public to them, as they are, by their own conduct, greatly responsible in the matter.
